PRE-REFORMATION RESIDENCES OF THE ARCHBISHOPS OF YORK. E do not know much about the Residences of the Archbishops of York in early Saxon times, nor is there very much to be known. They were missionaries, travelling about from place to place, strengthening the stakes of the Church by planting centres in the chief towns of the diocese, Beverley, Ripon, Southwell and York, and lengthening its cords by preaching, baptizing and confirming in the outlying parts of the great kingdom of Northumbria. Nor must we forget that they were not only missionaries, but most of them were monks. As soon as they could they built a monastery, which became their headquarters; the refuge to which they were only too glad to return from time to time, to enjoy its peaceful quiet and retirement after the turmoil of the outside world. Paulinus was...
