Christians should be bright and beautiful through all their youthful life, and gorgeous as they grow old and are about to step into the kingdom of Gods glory. Behold! he prayeth, may almost be said to be the description of the beginning of the Christian life. The great art of living Christianly is to have conscience for the undertone, and to have love for the upper, and, if possible, for the stronger experience. There is no point so critical of Christian character as the power to maintain love toward all men--not a love of personal attraction, but a love of benevolence, that begets a willingness to bear with them and work for them. The New Testament designs the Christian man to be a child of light and joy. Bearing fruit, sweet, luscious, and blessed, is the business of the Christian life. Though thousands love and earnestly, yet no one knows the whole want of his life till he has met with that which is a supply to all--mind to mind, heart to heart, faculty to faculty. It is only God who can satisfy the soul. Many Christians are like chestnuts--very pleasant nuts, but inclosed in very prickly burrs, which need various dealings of Nature, and her grip of frost, before the kernel is disclosed. Mens graces must get the better of their faults as a farmers crops do of the weeds--by growth. Feeling does not become stronger in the religious life by waiting, but..
