This statement, however, is chiefly applicable to the region west and southwest of the Missouri River, as in the states farther east - and especially where clover is a reliable crop - alfalfa is yet but little known or grown, although reports of its great worth and yields in the semi-arid country are rapidly attracting attention to its possibilities in a vast territory where red clover has occupied undisputed the premier position both for forage and for soil renovation. The best illustration of quickly appreciating alfalfa is afforded in Kansas, where the increase in area sown has been from 34,384 acres in 1891 to 276,008 acres in 1900, or more than 800 per cent. The enlarged and, in fact, new horizon which a proper utilization of alfalfa, along with some other plants of like recent introduction, opens up to farm and animal husbandry on millions of acres of our domain, before of uncertain utility, is difficult of conception.
